

- 1) What I like the best about the power rangers is the sense of belonging. We all instantly tried to make the best of our group. We started to communicate and even found commonality between each other. We began with our interests and what we wanted to do in life. We even chose each power ranger to be in the group. It was an immediate feeling of safeness and comfort each and every time our group comes together. We tried to really make each other feel as if they are heard and contributing to the group. I wouldn't want to change my group for anything. We even take time out to talk to each other out of class, even on personal terms. We even have conversations on meeting up just to relax and hang out.
- 2) Our group did not really have any breakdowns when it comes to each other or communicating, but we constantly helped each other through individual breakdowns. Such as if we couldn't find assignments or couldn't come to class, we would send each other the work or keep them on top of any work we missed. The only real breakdown between our team is that the whole group isn't here anymore.
- 3) The only breakdown we ever really had was being too at home with each other. At certain times we could get distracted and end up just having a conversation. However we always end up getting the work done with one of us re-focusing the team. However once we focus we collectively help each other to find answers and usually it becomes way easier to find our answers.
- 4) During my time as team leader I was really able to help my team with writing assignments because I was making sure we knew all the work and what needed to be done. We constantly kept up with each other because of this. Even helping each other with personal issues and talking about problems with one another. However I feel they helped me more as team leader because I was the last to get through the rotation. They helped me know and keep on track of content needed from the team leader. At first I had forgotten what I needed to do for the specific team leader assignments, but Luka and Alexandra were the first to come and guide me through the work.

- 5) I believe my team has improved my work by making sure I keep rereading and improving upon. I would read them some of my work and Justin would tell me where my writing wouldn't flow, and help me find better transitions. My team constantly has to remind me to also fix my punctuation and certain formatting errors.

Team Kingdom

- 1) There are a few things I love about my team. Me and my teammates show leadership, determination, and always being able to step forward towards our future. I like how you put me and my teammates together as one because we really see ourselves being friends in the next few years.
- 2) A breakdown along with my team is communication wise. Sometimes we struggle to speak with one another because we're always busy with school or work.
- 3) The breakthrough that helped us get back on track was pushing each other to the limit and being able to talk to each other and see where we need help in or at.
- 4) As a former team leader of my group, the possibilities I applied was being there for each other when we needed support and don't giving up just yet because we're at the end of this semester. We all helped each other in ways you couldn't recall and that's a good thing.
- 5) While being on Team Kingdom, I was able to get a lot of critiques back when I was writing my essays. They explained to me what I needed to fix and see if I could apply the issues to my own personal life and it kind of worked for me.

What I like best about my team is: is that we support each other. For example, if we miss the class today, we talked about what was discussed. We look out for one in other talks about the work that we don't get or understand we find a way to come up we a solution.

A breakdown we had as a team was: when we could come up with a solution for our problem at the beginning of the semester when we have to do possibly at first we didn't understand, but now we do we come as a group to talk about it that was one breakdown we had as a group.

Sometimes a breakdown can lead to a breakthrough! Do you have an example?

Painting, writing, dancing, playing embrace your creative side. Tap into your creativity.

Breakthrough is overcoming something and having an achievement. An example of a breakthrough is making a problematic discovery for curing a disease.

One thing I was able to do to help my team and make a difference as a Team Leader was: during my team be the team leader I was consistency checking on my team every day for the week that I was the team leader make sure that everyone was on stay on top of their work. Consistently deliver high-quality work and make sure others know they can trust me to get the job done.

My team did to make a difference in my work: Speak up, share what they believe. It's a basic form of honesty. Others might not always agree, but speaking up shows confidence and can fuel discussion, group thinking, and new ideas.

I like how everyone in my team was very helpful and good at communicating with each other. I also liked how everyone was friendly with each other and very responsive. A breakdown, we had as a team was dealing with missing team members. Originally, we were supposed to be four people, but one person disappeared. This caused issues in dividing the work evenly among everyone. To solve this issue, one person had to do more work than the other three people, which from my point of view, was not fair. To overcome this breakdown, we directly messaged the person that we were missing during one of our zoom classes and told her to join our WhatsApp group. The moral of the story here was communication. We were all able to communicate so well that we were able to locate that one missing person. The one thing that I did as a team leader that benefited the whole team was making sure that everyone had each other's contact information and was added in the WhatsApp group. I also made sure that everyone helped each other no matter what. In return, my team made sure everyone was collaborating with each other well and overcame, all the troubles together as a team. In addition, as a team leader, I made sure that everyone completed their tasks and homework on time. Overall, this was a great team and I had fun working with them.
